Cutting-edge retailers can look to CES to stand out as a leader in high-tech retail. Winning retailers are pivoting to think like start-ups as we enter this new way of doing business, acquiring new technologies for every edge to capture the consumer’s loyalty. But they also want to be able to tell their success stories. For them, it’s a story of risk-taking and foresight that pays off on the brand and the bottom line.

Retailers seeking the high-tech competitive advantage can gain answers at CES.
As retailers are required to leverage technology, an army of high-tech solutions have been created or re-applied to this booming industry. With products ranging from interactive displays to virtual mirrors, from robot greeters to in-store navigation systems, these technology product and service providers are seeking meaningful conversations with retailers about their capabilities.

CES brings the leaders in connected retailers, the retailers seeking technological solutions, and the retail tech providers together for the right connections.
Participants and attendees include retailers, AI/AR content firms, distributors, manufacturers, developers, graphics display community, boutique marketing firms, consultants, and more.
